“ I was fortunate enough to meet Bob by chance 4 summers ago when the RAGBRAI crowd came through Beacon and I needed a break before our night's stay in Oskaloosa. I was smitten by a really large wrench leaning up against the fence in front of their house and he was in the yard and we struck up a conversation about the tools we collected. I was fascinated by his knowledge about tools and we hit it off well enough that I got invited into his inner most storage shed that was full of tools. I was like a kid in a candy shop marveling at his collection, but he took the time and effort to unearth one of his prize finds, a red and rust colored torpedo shaped tool box buried way in the back. It was a set I'd never seen up close and in person and I was absolutely floored when he let me take a few pictures of it on the back tailgate of his pickup. I told him that regardless of what happened the rest of the 400 plus miles on the RAGBRAI ride, this was the highlight of my first RAGBRAI and thanked him profusely. HE told me the story behind the tool box and the tools inside it and I'll never forget that afternoon in Beacon. To his wife Lucille, I must admit I stumbled upon Bob's obituary quite by accident as I was going through my diary from July of 2013 re-reading my travels across Iowa, when I came upon my entry concerning the stop at the Thompson house. I immediately wondered if he was still alive as he had mentioned that he'd already had 4 strokes and despite his walking aids he was using, he seemed so full of energy. Mrs. Thompson, belatedly I wish you comfort in the coming months as life without Bob will take a while to adapt to. But know this, one hot summer afternoon in July of 2013, Bob made a huge impression on a total stranger riding his bicycle across Iowa and somehow God brought us together, if even for an hour or two. He likely wouldn't have remembered me, but I'll remember his kindness forever. Godspeed to you and all of your extended family in these upcoming months and years. Sincerely, Max Wellhouse Cedar Falls Iowa

“ This man is my best friend's Dad. He was scary to me when I first met him, but learned he was like me...tough talker, didn't follow thru. A collector is a mild word to describe him for sure! Many auctioneers are going to be sad also! I am sorry for the loss of him, but glad he is pain free. My thoughts to all of the family. Hugs!
