“ I didn't know this man well...I played a video game with him. we mostly talked about the game but when I brought up my son he would pipe up and talk about his kids.

He LOVED his kids.. i don't know much about the man other than StarWarsGalaxies and being a good chat but I know he loved his kids.

He was a good friend and I'm sure he was a great father.

he told me that his custody battle was rough but worth every second of the fight was worth it.

People like Michael drive me to be a better father for my son and a better human over-all. I consider myself lucky to of known a man of this caliber.

Rest in Peace, Brother.

“ I could share thousands of memories with Mike AKA Biohazard. We played star wars galaxies for years and years together. Even when that game came to an end we tried other games. We even started our own server and started getting it going. Mike was an amazing person. We talked about everything from star wars in game things, to life, kids, families, politics and everything in the middle.

I met mike about 2006/2007 playing star wars. We clicked pretty instant. We began doing content together, heroics, high end quests and grinding for all kinds of things from collections to resources and more. When SWG came to an end it was sad, players stayed to the very end, the moment the servers went offline. We moved to other games but nothing caught us like SWG. Years later I started to run a SWG server and Mike was there and ready. We ended up dropping that one and floating around unhappy with SWG in general because no server was doing what we wanted or felt like they should. We talked for a long while about maybe starting up one, I told him if I did start up a server again, he'd have to be one of my staff lol he was so excited about that. He was excited to learn how the game commands worked and how all the inside of the game actually worked. I'm sorry I did not get to show you that Mike.

You are sorely missed my friend. I'm so sorry.
